The short version. Seemab's first Tarjuma-tul-Quran paper landed at 42/50 (84%). Section A was a clean sweep — all ten multiple-choice questions correct, including one she got right after catching and crossing out her own first answer. Section C included a full-marks essay on Hazrat Sulaiman (AS) that hit every point in the key, including the easy-to-miss detail that he smiled at the ant's warning. The marks she lost were concentrated in two patterns: leaving out the Arabic text of a quoted dua (translation only), and, on two separate short questions, covering one half of a two-part answer very well while leaving the other half out entirely.

One item still open. Question 2(v) in Section B has no visible question label in the scan, and the answer on page 3 begins mid-sentence with almost no margin at the top of the page — the classic signature of a notebook page that didn't make it into the scan. What is visible answers the question correctly and has been provisionally credited in full (it does not change today's score), but Atif should confirm with Seemab whether a page was missed before this is treated as completely final.

Section-by-section breakdown

Section	Marks	%	What happened
A — MCQs (10 × 1)	10/10	100%	Every letter correct. Q.8 was corrected mid-paper from A to the right answer, C.
B(a) — Short Qs (5 × 2)	7/10	70%	One full mark (Luqman's naming), one provisional full mark (pending the page check), two answers that captured half of a two-part key point, one dua translated but not quoted in Arabic.
B(b) — Word meanings (5 × 1)	5/5	100%	All five Quranic words correctly translated.
B(c) — Comprehension (3 × 3)	7.5/9	83.3%	Two full-marks answers; one (six days of creation) missing the specific "six days" figure and the "directs every affair" detail.

C — Long Qs (2 × 8)	12.5/16	78.1%	Q.3 (Hazrat Sulaiman) full marks. Q.4 (Day of Qiyamah) lost a whole separately-named event (people disputing about Allah without knowledge) plus some of the tremor's specific imagery.

Subject performance

Strengths

- Perfect Section A on the very first attempt at this paper format — and she self-corrected Q.8 mid-exam.
- Perfect word meanings (5/5).
- Q.3 Section C essay on Hazrat Sulaiman (AS) is complete and well-organised under her own headings, missing nothing in the key.
- Her Urdu paraphrasing shows real understanding of the ayat's meaning, not rote memorisation.

Areas to work on

- Quote the Arabic text of a dua/ayat when asked, not just its meaning — it usually carries its own separate mark.
- When a long question asks to "describe the events" of something, list every distinct event the surah names before writing, so none get left out (Q.4 lost a full event this way).
- When a key point has two parts (two blessings, two consequences), check the question is asking for a count and make sure both halves are covered.

Comparison with previous attempts

None available — this is Seemab's first attempt at Tarjuma-tul-Quran. For context, her opening attempt in each of her other four subjects was: Mathematics 100%, Physics 97.7%, Chemistry 98.5%, Biology 80.0%. At 84.0%, this debut sits within that range: a solid start, held back mainly by two incomplete two-part answers and one missing event in Section C rather than by any misunderstanding of the surahs.

Full question-by-question marking with her quoted Urdu answers is in the detailed report: <quran/exams/exam-01-maryam-anbiya-hajj-naml-luqman-sajdah/attempts/2026-09-13/report.pdf>
